

Dr. Nikolaos A. Kyriazis is currently an Assistant Lecturer in Money, Banking and Finance at the Department of Accounting and Finance, University of Thessaly, Greece. He is an economist that holds a Bachelor's degree in Economics from the University of Thessaly, Volos, Greece, and a Master's in Economic Theory from the Athens University of Economics and Business, Athens, Greece. His doctoral thesis is about unconventional monetary policy and has the title: 'Central Bank Policies' and his post-doctoral thesis is about modern financial investments and has the title: 'Determinants of the market value of a portfolio consisting of cryptocurrencies', both at the Department of Economics, University of Thessaly, Volos, Greece. He has been an adjunct lecturer at the Department of Economics and the Department of Accounting and Finance at the University of Thessaly, Greece. His academic interests are: monetary policy, currency values, cryptocurrencies, banking, the sovereign-bank nexus, financial investments, and financial crises. His academic work has 1590 citations. He has published papers in high-quality academic journals in the ABS3 list like: Energy Economics, International Review of Financial Analysis, Journal of Commodity Markets and in the ABS2 list such as the Journal of Economic Studies, Quarterly Review of Economics, North American Journal of Economics and Finance, Research in International Business and Finance, International Economics and Economic Policy, and Defence and Peace Economics. Dr. Kyriazis had the exceptional honour to be listed at the top 2% of economists according to the Stanford University list (constructed by Distinguished Professor John Ioannidis and was published in September 2024).